MR. JIM HOGAN is the Vice President, Accessibility in Technology at Google, United States.

Jim is a diversity, equity, inclusion, and belonging champion, a human rights activist and a keynote speaker. He is an advocate for change and a strong representative of what is possible for people on the Autism spectrum. A self-taught Computer Scientist at the age of 16, Jim found his passion for working in leadership positions in Corporate America. Throughout his career, he has engaged in advocacy and supported HR departments to better understand the needs of neurodiverse employees.

Jim has willingly taken on the role of peer mentor and support to many young professionals with autism who are struggling to enter the workforce. With his powerful voice and advocacy for change and acceptance, he has led the way for hundreds of professionals with autism who entered the workforce behind him.
